Carroll County

In mid October 1818, Andrew Jackson and Isaac Shelby successfully strong-armed Chickasaw Indians into ceding lands in the tribe's cultural region lying east of the Mississippi River. Land south of the Ohio River and north of the Kentucky-Tennessee border became the Jackson Purchase; land within Tennessee became the Western District. The next year, R. E. C. Dougherty was appointed to register land claims in the area around Surveyor's Post No.2, which became Christmasville. The earliest registration is for David Gillespie and dates to 1820 Dec 20. The legislature passed an act to organize the region into new counties on November 7, 1821 (Acts of Tennessee 1821, p.39). Four months later, on March 11, 1822 Carroll County, Tennessee was organized, one of four established by the act (the others were Henry, Hardin and McNairy), and named for Tennessee's then-current governor William Carroll. Seventeen counties were established for the region between the Mississippi and Tennessee rivers. Huntingdon was chosen as the county seat.

The county currently bounds approximately 607 square miles.

In the federal census of 1920 Carroll County's population was fixed at 24,361 individuals. Eighty years later the 2000 census recorded a population of 29,475.

Newspapers

Those seeking to find things in early local newspapers face several challenges. First, almost all newspapers were issued weekly, not daily, so the likelihood that a report of an event was made near the time it happened is not high. Second, until the twentieth century there were no reporters so an event appeared only if the editor was notified, and then only if there was space to print a notice and if the editor chose to do so. Finally, though newspapers began being published in McKenzie as early as 1839, only a few scattered issues and incomplete runs have survived before 1936; with one exception there are no complete files extant.

Newspaper titles and issues are listed below in the order they appear on the film. If a sequential run is available, then the range of dates is given by noting the first and last issues using an en dash rather than listing each individually. In the accompanying lists, the newspaper masthead (title) is given first, followed by the volume and issue number separated by a colon, as “1:24,” and then the date.
