Field in Chicago The 1968 event is described as "daybreak"—the early stirring of a global movement for people with intellectual disabilities. The goal was to put a bright—and very public—spotlight on ability, not disability. (Adapted from <https://www.specialolympics.org/about/history>)

At last week's meeting Meera Patel (UTM Student), Dr. Carrie Humphreys, political science, and Steve Vantrease discussed the trip to Spain and Morocco that Ned Ray McWherter Institute Junior Innovators took during UTM's spring vacation in 2019.

Unlike other trips, students had to propose an international study-travel trip to a country that none had visited previously and plan an itinerary for the trip. Travel arrangements were made through UTM's Mike Sudzum, but details of whether to visit Madrid, Marrakech or Casablanca had to be decided by the students. Once the basic itinerary was fleshed out, groups of 2 or 3 students planned each day's activities. Meera and Stone Craft, for example, were in charge of the visit to Casablanca.
