Dr. Brittany Cole, Dr. Laura Hatch and Dr. Joey Mehlhorn published “Using Industry Certifications to Improve the Marketability and Skill Development of Accounting and Finance Students” in the International Journal of Business and Social Science Research in October 2023.

The article highlights various accounting- and finance-related certifications undergraduate and graduate students can pursue while still in school. Examples include the Securities Industry Essentials exam, the Chartered Financial Analyst designation, the Certified Financial Planner designation, the tax specialist Enrolled Agent designation and the QuickBooks certification.

Each of these certifications or designations allows students to set themselves apart in the job market because students highlight a commitment to their professional futures by investing in the process required for each certification.

Additionally, many of these programs offer scholarships for students to offset the expenses associated with these designations, so there are advantages to starting each of these early.

The article outlines the different certifications and licenses, required exams, advantages, disadvantages and expenses for each of the designations mentioned above.

As universities continue to look for ways to graduate students with a competitive advantage, offering help to achieve these certifications may be a viable option to set students up for success with future employers.

Three UTM history professors presented papers at the Ohio Valley History Conference Oct. 26 and 27 at Western Kentucky University.

Dr. Margaret Lewis presented “Teaching the History of Pandemics During a Pandemic.” Lewis explained how a course on the history of epidemic diseases helped students make sense of the COVID pandemic of 2020-21.

Dr. Renee LaFleur presented “Lessons from Jane Addams.” She discussed how the ideas of American progressive reformer Jane Addams informs her work as director of the Verna B. Coleman Center for Women and Gender Equality.

Dr. Richard Garlitz presented “Teaching the Poetry of Hafiz: Wine Drinking, Forgiveness and a Little Johnny Cash?” Garlitz showed how the music of Johnny Cash can help students understand ambiguity in the work of the famous 14th century Persian poet.

UTM represented at Administrative Professionals Summit

UTM was represented at the 2023 Administrative Professionals Summit held Nov. 8-9. This conference is sponsored by the UT System Administration Human Resources Employee and Organizational Development as a system-wide event designed for rigorous learning for administrative professionals from across the state. Attendees are provided with professional growth and leadership development relative to the roles and responsibilities of administrative professionals. Those attending included (front row, from left) Elizabeth Vickers, Benita Evans, Kelley Trevathan (second row, from left) Heather Coleman, Courtney Roberts, Holly Dethloff, Bonnie Dye, (third row, from left) Brooke Wagster, Ashley Vance, Tracey Mires, Tonya Evans, Kim Barnett-Stone (back row, from left) Teresa Hibbard, Selena Pearce and Shelly Long.

Ronne Jones Cox, the electronic resources and discovery librarian, represented the Paul Meek Library at the Library 2.023 Worldwide Virtual Conference sponsored by San Jose State University on Nov. 9.

She shared her passion for collaboration with more than 5,000 registered librarians across the world with her presentation, “Collaborative Programming: How we can reach our communities by working together.”

Dr. Cooper Johnson and Dr. Jamye Long, both associate professors of management, participated in the Teambuilding and Leadership Exercise Debrief Panel at the 2023 Go Cloud Careers Summit, held Oct. 13-15 in Orlando.

This panel involved the exercise leaders sharing their observations.

In addition to hearing from the exercise leaders, the team members shared their thoughts, takeaways and lessons learned.

HAVE YOU SCENE?
Alumnus speaks at Veterans Day program

“Thank you for your service” was the theme presented by guest speaker Col. David A. Strauss (ret.) at the Veterans Day program held Friday, Nov. 10, in Watkins Auditorium in the Boling University Center at UT Martin.

Strauss, a 39-year Army veteran, spoke to the audience about the phrase “Thank you for your service.”

“What is the service that veterans provide?” he said. “Is it getting up early in the morning and going and doing (physical training)? Maybe it’s deploying. No, I don’t think so.

“I think the service that we provide is that we willingly go into harm’s way to project the will of the United States on our adversaries. Don’t get me wrong; we do a lot of other things. We have operations and humanitarian operations, but when it gets right down to it, we stand in the way of someone – a nation or non-nation state – and we force them to do or to not do something.”

Strauss then asked if that is true, then what is the equal-value compensation that those providing military service receive? Is it the money? Is it the benefits?

“In my opinion, there is no equal compensation for what it is that we do as veterans,” he said. “If there is no equal compensation, perhaps what we should say is not ‘Thank you for your service,’ but ‘Thank you for your selfless service.’”

Strauss then asked if there is no equal-value compensation, why do those who provide military service do what they do?

“It’s a word, and it’s a word that we don’t use very often these days: Honor,” he said. “It’s that selfless act of putting ourselves in harm’s way to protect our citizens and protect our American way of life so that others don’t have to, and there is no adequate compensation for that.

“It’s the sacrifice or willingness to sacrifice so that others won’t have to. We few stand ready on the wall so others won’t have to, so that they can pursue what the Founding Fathers decreed: life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.”

Strauss is a UT Martin alumnus, receiving a commission as lieutenant of infantry in 1993. He enlisted in the Army in 1983 after graduating high school, and in 1999, he completed the Special Forces Operational Detachment Officer Qualification Course and was assigned to the 7th Special Force Group (Airborne).

In 2004, he was selected to be a civil affairs officer, which he served until his retirement in 2022.

A native of Bradford, Strauss and his wife, Cheryl, now live in Elizabethtown, Kentucky. They have three children and four grandchildren.

Hutchison named FFA American Star of Agribusiness

Lainey Hutchison is a sophomore from Gadsden in Crockett County majoring in farm and ranch management at UT Martin. She was an FFA member for all four years of high school, and she is currently a member of the UT Martin rodeo team, where she takes part in breakaway roping, team roping and goat-tying.

Hutchison also has an eye toward advancing agribusiness and doing that through education. She has given horse-riding lessons, run a small goat business and coached summer farm camps over the last couple of years.

Her star in agribusiness is on the rise – at least, the national FFA organization thinks so.

Hutchison was named the American Star in Agribusiness at the FFA National Convention in Indianapolis on Nov. 8.

The road to winning the national honor began her senior year in high school.

“I won the state Star in Agribusiness my senior year of high school,” she said. “That made me eligible to run for the national competition.

“I was notified that I was a finalist last summer, and I had to do an interview in August over Zoom with about 15 judges.”

Hutchison said her agribusiness ventures coupled with her enjoyment of teaching younger generations about farm life bolstered her chances of winning the national honor.

“I think being involved with the kids and teaching agriculture and having a goal for the future involving the next generation was an eye-catcher (in the National Star competition),” she said. “I know that (other competitors) – two of them had a landscaping business and one guy had a concrete company. Theirs are definitely good services.

“I think with mine, everybody loves involving children and the next generation. I felt like that was what my project was aimed toward, and that helped me a lot (in winning the national honor).”

Hutchison’s supervised agricultural experience – known as an SAE, a required activity in FFA - was in equine science. An SAE allows students to learn by doing, by either owning or operating an agricultural business, working or serving an internship at an agriculture-based business or conducting an agriculture-based scientific experiment and reporting results.

“I started teaching horse-riding lessons in high school,” she said. “I started with just two students, and it eventually turned into eight to 10 students per week. I love getting to teach with the horses, and I love

UTM students invited to attend AFA conference

Skyhawks claim third straight share of league title

The UT Martin football team is flashing threes, letting people know the team claimed its third straight conference title Saturday, either a shared title or an outright championship, beating Big South-OVC Football Association rival Southeast Missouri 41-14 in Hardy M. Graham Stadium. This is the first year for the football association. The Skyhawks shared the 2022 OVC championship with SEMO and won the 2021 title outright. The final Big South-OVC standings will be known after this Saturday’s games.

going to share my love with the students.”

Hutchison grew up on a cattle farm, and her father owned a sale barn when she was younger. “We now farm beef cattle,” she said. “I’ve always been around all kinds of animals. I started in rodeo when I was 7.

“When I started high school, I needed extra money for traveling with rodeo, so that’s why I started giving lessons.”

The farm camps came about when people in the community, including family and friends, wanted to see the Hutchison farm and visit the animals.

“We did just a couple of farm camps the first summer we had it,” she said. “I ended up having waiting lists for all my camps. I had a lot more people wanting to come than what I was expecting.

This summer, I had about 10 camps, and in each camp, I had 16 to 20 students.”

The farm camp business helped her horse-riding lesson business to grow, as children wanted to learn more about horses when they saw them on the farm.

Each year at the National FFA Convention and Expo, four FFA members are honored with American Star Awards for outstanding accomplishments in FFA and agricultural education.

The American Star Awards – including American Star Farmer, American Star in Agribusiness, American Star in Agricultural Placement and American Star in Agriscience – are presented to FFA members who demonstrate outstanding agricultural skills and competencies through completion of an SAE.

Hutchison said she was honored to earn the American Star in Agribusiness award.

“I’m still learning how big a deal it is,” she said. “I originally did not realize how big of an opportunity this is.

“FFA has something for everybody, even if you’re not from an agriculture background. I just think it’s something that everybody should get involved in because it’s a great organization, and there are opportunities placed right at your feet through FFA – at least, it has been for me and a lot of the students from my Crockett County chapter.”

Sixteen American Star Award finalists from throughout the U.S. were nominated by a panel of judges who then interviewed the finalists. Four were chosen for the national awards.

Hutchison said she wasn’t quite sure about a career path at this point, but said she wants to get a job in pharmaceutical sales or an agribusiness sales job.

“I also want to continue my ag tourism back at my family’s farm,” she said. “I’ve got a lot of ideas. I’m going to continue my farm camps, but we’re looking into doing adult tours and things like that on our farm.

“I like building relationships with people and communicating. I feel like I’m pretty strong in that area, so I’d like to get a job working in livestock sales or something like that.”

Winning a national FFA American Star award is a unique honor, but certainly deserving of the star who shines on West Tennessee.
